Albanian rape threat

Tue 9:25 am +00:00, 7 Jan 2025

posted by Tapestry

Albanians were the most likely to be arrested, followed by Afghans, Iraqis, Algerians and Somalians. There were 48 nationalities with a higher arrest rate per 1,000 of their populations than British suspects.

Once weighted for their respective populations, Albanians had the highest arrest rate at 209.8 arrests per 1,000 of their population followed by Afghans (106.9), Iraqis (92.9), Algerians (72.7), Moroccans (70) and Somalis (64.6). The rate for British suspects was just 12.

What does all this mean?

It means that mass immigration isn't only making you poorer; it's also making you and your family less safe. That is the key conclusion, even if it does fly in the face of the pro-immigration religion among the elite class.

As many studies in other European nations have similarly found, in Britain immigrants are significantly more likely to be arrested for all crimes and are especially more likely to commit crimes of a sexual nature.

I've said it before and I'll say it again.

One of the most infuriating things in politics is when leaders accuse voters of "misinformation" while simultaneously hiding information from them.

You see it all the time.

On mass immigration. On crime. And, as we've been reminded this week, on the rape gangs scandal that's currently engulfing Britain.

Such is the disdain and contempt with which politicians and civil servants treat ordinary people nowadays that rather than be transparent, open, and honest about what information they have they either conceal it or refuse to collect.

Only yesterday, for example, the Home Office refused to publish information about the number of utterly depraved rape gang members who have been deported out of the country—a policy that was first advocated right here on this Substack.

At the same time, Keir Starmer's Labour government has just refused to launch a fresh national inquiry into the shocking rape gangs that would yield crucial new information about what is a truly national scandal—especially in areas that have so far escaped scrutiny, no doubt because Labour MPs are terrified about what such an inquiry might find has been going on—is still going on?—in many Labour-held areas.

The scandal that SHAMES Britain and makes me angrier than I've ever been

What all this reflects is a concerted attempt by the elite class, by the British state, to conceal information and data which might challenge or completely undermine what we might call the 'Officially Approved Narrative'.

The narrative which tells you mass immigration is only ever positive, multiculturalism is working just fine, and the people who are imposing these things on everybody else know exactly what they're doing.

But do they? Do they really?

Not so, suggests a damning new study, the first major investigation of immigration and crime which has tracked down crucial information.

Based on freedom of information requests that were painstakingly submitted to dozens of police authorities across the country, many of which were sitting on lots of information but refusing to release it, the findings, compiled by the Centre for Migration Control, make for grim reading.

Look away now if you are of the 'diversity is our strength' mindset. Here are the key findings which underline what is really happening on Britain's streets:

Foreign nationals in Britain are more than three times as likely to be arrested for sexual offences as British citizens

More than 9,000 foreign nationals were arrested for sexual offences in the first 10 months of last year across England and Wales

The 9,055 foreign national arrests for sex offences works out at a rate of 164.6 per 100,000 of the population, compared with 48 per 100,000 for British people.

In London, foreign nationals account for two-thirds (67%) of all sex offence arrests.

Foreigners are 3.5 times as likely to be arrested for sex offences as British suspects

For all crimes, foreign nationals were arrested at twice the rate of Brits

Overall, more than 131,000 foreign nationals were arrested in the first ten months of last year

While foreigners make up 9 per cent of the population, they account for 16.1 per cent of the total number of arrests
